Myth about Iodised Salt

*415. SHRI N. GIRIPRASAD :
Shri CHATURANAN MISHRA :
Will the Minister of HEALTH AND FAMILY WELFARE be pleased to state :

(a) whether Government's attention has been drawn to the news item appearing in the 'Feedback' column of the Life Line page of Indian Express, dated August 7, 1993 under the caption "The Myth about Iodised Salt" wherein it is stated hat iodine added to common salt disappears when the iodised salt is exposed to a warm, humid climate and the remaining iodine is lost during cooking;

(b) if so, what is the use of launching the compulsory iodisation programme to fight the goitre and related diseases; and

(c) what is Government's reaction to this observation ?

THE MINISTER OF HEALTH AND FAMILY WELFARE (SHRI B. SHANKARANAND) : (a) to (c) The Government is aware of the report, which does not appear to be based on scientific facts.

In our country, potassium Iodate is used for iodising salt which is quite stable in our climatic conditions. Studies conducted have shown that though there is some marginal loss of iodine due to exposure to sun light as well as for climatic conditions and during cooking, but the same is well taken care of by the fact that at the production level the iodine content is prescribed at 30 ppm while at the consumption level the requirement is 15 ppm only. Moreover, in the National Iodine Deficiency Disorders Control Programme, emphasis is given on proper packaging of salt to minimise the possible loss of iodine.
